What and Where Next?: Some Thoughts on a Spatially Queered Recommended Reading List

Jen Jack Giesecking

Queer (theory) is never done or complete, and we (queers, humans) are each always becoming, whole and otherwise. The readings and artwork brought together in this text from Beirut, Copenhagen, and Tijuana are acts of witnessing and exploring difference. The artists, scholars, writers, and activists in this book reiterate the idea that what/who/where is a queer is a constantly shifting and growing multitude of terrains and landscapes, places and spaces, environments and geographies. What next then? And where?

To help you embark further on the path of queer visual geographies, I have included a series of three recommended reading lists on the topics of geographic theory, queer theory and LGBTQ studies, and LGBTQ studies in geography.

As I mentioned in the introduction, I used to be afraid to get in bed with theory. In getting to know geographic and queer theory, I made more sense of the world and my everyday life. And so I hope you come to enjoy getting in bed with theory as much as I do.
